

DIY Christmas snow globes

From: <https://www.giftofcuriosity.com/>

Make these with the kids!" When it comes to Christmas activities for kids, these DIY Christmas snow globes are more complicated than a lot of DIY crafts. But the extra effort was well worth the reward.

All you need to make these DIY Christmas snow globes is an empty wide-mouthed jar, a figurine to go inside, glitter, hot glue, and water.

Find some old small jars for this project. Get your glitter and a glue gun on handy, and you can find figurines at the dollar store.

First, fill the jars with water to just below the threads. (If you fill the jar to the top, the water will spill when you put the figurine inside.)

Then add glitter to the jars. Lots and lots of glitter. Please be careful not to get glitter in eyes!

This next step is definitely an adult-only step! Hot glue needs to go on the bottom of the figurines while kids watch.

Press the figurine into the center of the jar lid.

Then add even more hot glue around the base of the figurine just to make sure it was securely stuck to the lid.

Repeat for the second figurine, and voila!

Next, insert the figurine into the water and screwed the lid on the jar.

Then, just to be safe, add an extra layer of hot glue around the lid to prevent leaks. (Although they seem to hold the water well, don't leave these any place where they would cause a huge mess if they were to leak.)

Once the glue dries, they're done!

The kids will have a blast turning and shaking them and watching the glitter swirl around.
